SCHOOL CHILDREN WILL PARTICIPATE IN BIG PROGRAM

To Take Part in Nation-Wide
Singing of "America"
Tomorrow

ELKS SPONSORING IT
Local Radio Stores Install The Necessary Equipment In Schools Here

Radios have been installed in all of the public school buildings of Bristol so that tomorrow the children can be directed in the singing of "America" for the first time in history from one point over a nation-wide hook-up, in celebration of Flag Day. The affair is being sponsored by the Bristol Lodge of Elks in connection with the national order of Elks.

B. F. McGee has placed a radio in the Bath street school, Frank Pfeiffer, Washington street and Jefferson avenue; Bristol Radio Shop, Beaver street building, Wood street, McCole's Radio Shop. The high school has its own radio.

The broadcast tomorrow will begin at 3.15 daylight saving time.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks with its great army of over 700,000 members will be the sponsors of a unique national patriotic program, the main events of which will take place at Monticello, Albemarle County, Virginia, the residence and estate of Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States and the author of the Declaration of Independence. Prominent members of the Grand Lodge of Elks will make a pilgrimage to this historical landmark and there on the portico of the ancient homestead they will gather for the services. A national hook-up over the National Broadcasting Company network will convey the program to the public schools where upon a given signal several million children will sing "America," led from the microphone at Monticello and accompanied by a band and glee club of over 100 musicians.

Grand Exalted Ruler Eugene Thompson, a former Justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois, and Honorable Rush L. Holland of Washington will deliver brief addresses. The mighty chorus of school children will be led by Past Grand Exalted Ruler Fred Harper, of Lynchburg, Virginia, and the ceremony opened by Past Grand Exalted Ruler Joseph T. Fanning, editor of the Elks Magazine.

This decidedly unique program with the national broadcast was brought about for the first time through the combined efforts of the Elks Lodges of Virginia and the Grand Lodge of Elks acting through the Lodge Activities Committee of the Grand Lodge. The Elks Lodges in 1499 different communities are making the necessary arrangements with the school heads of those cities for the assemblage of the school children at the hour scheduled for the broadcast throughout the country.

Bristol Lodge of Elks tomorrow night at eight o'clock will present to Cub Troop of Scouts of which Ralph Scheffey is commissioner, a flag holder. The presentation address will be made by J. Leslie Kilcoyne, and the gift will be received by Commissioner Scheffey. The presentation will take place in the Elks Home.

CRAZED MAN SLAIN

Phila., June 13.—Driven insane by the heat and liquor, an armed criminal ran amuck with a pistol last night, rushing through the streets firing shots over the heads of terrified pedestrians and was finally slain after engaging in a ten-minute gun battle with police from the windows of a house where he barricaded himself. Police today said the man, John J. Morley, 34, had a criminal record dating back to 1914, and was awaiting trial on a robbery charge, and was suspected of holding up a store last night.

WELCOME RELIEF

Philadelphia, June 13.—Thunder-showers, accompanied by a 20 degree drop in the temperature today brought to Philadelphia and its environs, a welcome relief from a week of blistering heat which took a toll of 25 lives in this district. Yesterday afternoon the official weather bureau thermometer registered 94 degrees shortly before 3 o'clock, equal to the all-time record for that date set in 1914. Weather experts said today's temperature will not rise above the low 80's.

MAJOR CONTROVERSIES

Washington, D. C., June 13.—The bipartisan revolt on Capitol Hill which has projected the special session of Congress past the opening date of the World Economic Conference, today developed major controversies over income tax publicity, tax exemption securities, veterans' relief and banking reform. There were indications the session might be prolonged throughout the week. Administration leaders seeking once more to force final adjournment by nightfall, frankly charged there was a conspiracy to keep Congress in session until the Economic Conference reaches a decision on tariff and debts.

The tax controversies moved toward a showdown in the Senate which had before it the conference report on the industrial recovery and $3,300,000,000 public works bill. An agreement was reached to vote on the report during the afternoon.

DOG BURIED HERE SHARES HONORS, LEONINE MARKER

Has Name Inscribed With That of "Teddy Boy" at Francis-ville Home

OWNED BY P. K. CONRAD

Although "Jack," pet dog years ago of Mr. and Mrs. Philip K. Conrad, now rests in this borough, he shares honors on the leonine monument at the Francisville Home for Smaller Animals, Radnor, with Conrad's "Teddy Boy," a Boston terrier.

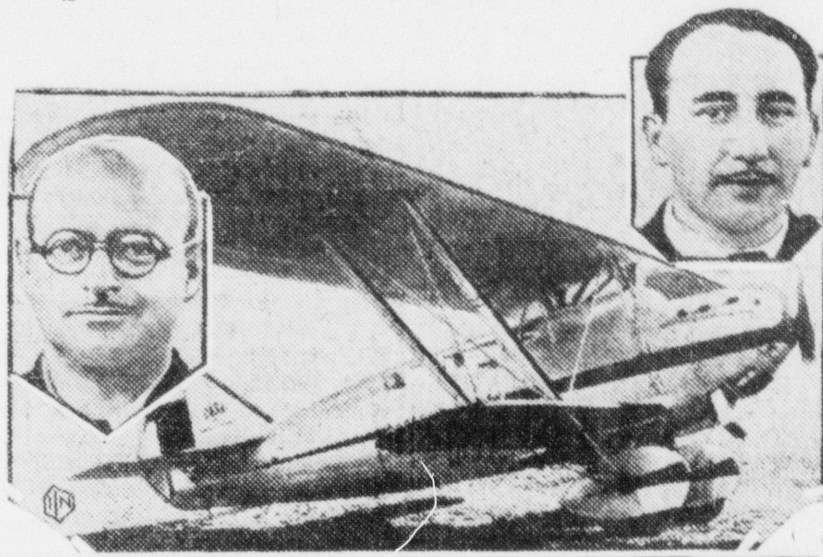

The monument of a lion which has caused much comment, and which marks the graves of "Teddy Boy," and on the side of which Jack's name is also inscribed, is the property of the Conrads of Uhlertown, formerly of Bristol. It was the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin's "buggy" rider, Paul Cranston, who recently called attention to the animal graveyard at Radnor, telling of such in word and picture. It was mentioned at that time that a lion was buried in the animal cemetery, but now Mr. Conrad comes to the fore and informs that no lion rests beneath the statue of the lion. Whether a lion lies elsewhere in the plot is not definitely determined.

This week the following informative story appeared in the Evening Bulletin, written by Laura Lee:

To the Editor of The Bulletin:
Sir: In The Bulletin for May 29 in an article by Laura Lee, you said a pet lion was buried among 2,500 dogs in the Francisville Animal Cemetery, near Radnor, and on the picture page you showed a picture of the grave. No doubt your readers will be interested in seeing a picture of "The Lion," so I am enclosing a picture of Conrad's "Teddy Boy."

HULL ABSENT WHEN LIST IS ANNOUNCED

American Sector Wholly Unoccupied and Amusing
Interlude Follows

BRITISH MAY DEFAULT

By George R. Holmes
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

GEOLOGICAL MUSEUM, London, England, June 13.—Simultaneously with Britain's reported determination to discontinue debt payments to the United States under the Baldwin agreement, the World Economic Conference listened for hours today to the oratory of world statesmen.

Most of them, directly or indirectly, supported Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald's plea for debt reduction on the basis of the Lausanne Agreement, which settled reparations at a dime on the dollar.

As a result of the MacDonald speech and the expectation that the British debt die would be cast one way or the other today, Secretary of State Cordell Hull, chief of the American delegation, considered it necessary to revise his speech and hence postpone his address to the conference until tomorrow. Hull absented himself from the conference working out changes in his speech with the aid of advice from Washington.

The official explanation of his non-appearance was that a certain lapse of time was necessary to obtain Washington's approval of the alterations. But there was reason to believe that Washington and Hull agreed it would be advisable to withhold America's voice until Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain has addressed the House of Commons, this afternoon, regarding the June 15th payment alluded to previously by Premier MacDonald as an "awkward hurdle."

The absence of Hull and other American delegates from the conference caused an amusing interlude. Premier MacDonald, as chairman of the conference announced the list of nations in the order in which their spokesmen were to speak. The United States headed the list but when MacDonald looked down upon the American sector he found it wholly unoccupied.

PARIS, France, June 13.—France will follow Great Britain if the British government decides to make no payment on the foreign debt installment due to the United States Thursday, it was stated on reliable authority today. Should Britain make no payment, France will second whatever reasons are voiced by Britain for the default. Should the British government decide to pay however, France will merely ignore the date the installment falls due.

B. H. S. WINS TILT IN LITTLE "WORLD SERIES"

Defeat New Hope, 5 to 1, in First Game of Series of Three

2ND GAME TOMORROW

By Oscar Corn
(B. H. S. Press Representative)

Yesterday at New Hope, the hard-hitting Bristol High team got the upper hand in the little "world series" for the championship of Lower Bucks County League, when they smashed through the New Hope High nine, 5 to 2.

Overconfidence was the main cause that Bristol did not score in the first three innings. However, just as the fourth inning began, there was a threat of rain. This got the local boys going, as they wanted to have some runs in case the game was stopped. It was in this inning that the Cardinal and Gray got started, and through Coach Dougherty's reliable "squeeze" play, four runs were scored. Rockhill's hit in the fifth, which scored Cahall, was the only other run.

The New Hope team did not look very fast, nor had any sluggers. They were kept well in hand by Firce, who allowed only four scattered hits. In the fourth a double and a single gave New Hope their initial tally. A hit and an error scored their final run.

Tomorrow the second game of this series will be played here. It will start at 4.15 o'clock due to examinations. This will be the last game if Bristol wins; if not, one more game will be played, on a neutral field.

FIRE ALARM NOTICE

Fire Chief James L. McGee announces that No. 4 circuit of the fire alarm system, embracing the third and fourth ward is out of service, due to the storm.

All fire calls from these districts should be telephoned, calling Bristol 811.

It is expected the service will be out of commission about two or three days.

The intense heat wave of yesterday was broken last night by a severe electrical storm. The storm caused considerable damage to both electric and telephone lines and a number of transformers were burned out. Street lights were out during the entire night.

Circuit No. 4 of the fire alarm system which embraces all of the third and fourth wards, was put out of commission.

Electric wires fell at Beaver and Mansion streets, and illuminated the entire section as the "live" wires curled and twisted about the street.

Two women were injured as the storm broke when a sedan driven by Miss Molly Goldman, 23 years old, of 1849 North 33rd street, Philadelphia, crashed into the Fallsington tunnel abutment, wrecking the car. The driver's mother, Mrs. Esther Goldman and a companion, Miss Anna Frankel, of 1708 Rodman street, Philadelphia, were taken to St. Francis Hospital. Miss Goldman was not injured.

Mrs. Goldman, who is 59, was reported as suffering from lacerations of the scalp and a possible fracture of the skull while Miss Frankel is suffering from a possible fracture of the right knee and severe lacerations of both knees.

Miss Goldman told Patrolman A. P. Diem, who investigated, that she was proceeding to Philadelphia but while descending the hill to enter the tunnel she was blinded by the lights from another car and lost control of the machine which struck the abutment.

'BULL,' FIRE DEPARTMENT MASCOT, ELECTROCUTED

Dog Gives Life in the Line of Duty; Act Warned
Firemen

PET OF WHOLE TOWN

"Bull," the mascot of the Bristol Consolidated Fire Department, is dead. He was electrocuted early this morning, and it is the opinion of the firemen that "Bull" gave his life in the line of duty. He leaped from the fire apparatus at Beaver and Mansion streets, where the firemen had been called when an electric wire fell into the street. "Bull" jumped directly into the flooded street and the water was highly charged by the wire. "Bull" fell over dead, instantly. The firemen seeing the fate of their mascot, jumped back from the water, until the wire had been removed.

Then the lifeless body of the dog was picked up and carried tenderly back to fire headquarters, where it is lying in state today. A casket is being made and "Bull" will be buried today in his blanket made of blue with large red letters, "B. C. F. D." Burial will be in the rear of the municipal building, where "Bull's" grave will always be kept green and become a hallowed spot.

To say that "Bull" was the pet of the department is only half stating the case. He was the pet of the entire town. Men, women and children knew him. They all called to him as they passed. Every fireman loved him and he loved them.

"Bull" seldom failed to answer an alarm, either during the day or night. He would leap upon the first apparatus to leave the building, and on arrival at the fire would follow the men wherever they went. He had been in the department about two years, having made friends with William Bennett as he was making inspections. He followed Bennett to the fire station. Later a family residing in Crydon identified him, but presented him to the firemen. From that time he lived at the fire station. Almost daily some of the firemen took "Bull" home and had him as a guest at meal time. In addition to this, food was brought to the fire station for him and oftentimes he had a choice tid-bit in this manner.

NEW COUNCILMAN FROM SIXTH WARD TAKES OFFICE OATH

Richard Howard Sworn In By Burgess Clifford L.
Anderson

'COPS' MAKE 27 ARRESTS

Tree Commission Asks For Authority to Have Trees
Trimmed in Borough

The oath of office was administered to a new member of Borough Council, last night, when Richard Howard, was sworn-in as a representative from the sixth ward, filling the vacancy caused by the resignation of Clay Littleton, who moved from Bristol.

The oath was administered to Mr. Howard by Burgess Clifford L. Anderson.

Bristol Borough Board of Health advised council that a chemical engineer of the State Health Board had made a survey of the conditions at the Superior Zinc Corporation and had found that the fumes emanating from the zinc works as now being operated, constitute a nuisance which is abatable, or at least capable of material reduction. "As a nuisance, action does not seem to lie with the Bristol Borough Board of Health, but with the Bristol Borough Council," wrote the State Board.

Council requested the local Health Board to have the State Health Board send a chemist here and analyze the smoke which emanates from the plant to determine whether or not it is detrimental to health.

The Tree Commission asked for authority to have trees trimmed where needed in the borough. The commission was requested to consult with the president of Council for instructions.

Councilmen Spencer and Pfeiffer thought the Commission should be given the authority to have the work done, so that it would be uniform and done properly, rather than notify the property owners to have the work done.

Councilman Richard Winslow informed council that the vacancy in the staff of men at the sewer pumping station, caused by the death of Jacob McBrien, would not be filled for the present. "We find that we are able to operate the plant with the present crew," stated Mr. Winslow.

Police reported 27 arrests during the month. Twelve were discharged, one held for court, four fined, three committed to jail and seven placed on probation.

One hundred and twenty-two lodgers were given shelter, 10 small lights and three arc lights were reported out during the month. Two doors were found open after hours.

Invitation was received from Burgees Anderson for the councilmen to attend the baccalaureate sermon for members of the graduating class of the Bristol High School, Sunday morning, in St. James's Church.

Permission was requested to hang sign in front of 113 Radcliffe street. Referred to Street & Highway Committee with power to act.

Plumber's bond of Angelo Soudy was held over for further consideration.

Dr. J. Fred Wagner informed council the intake of the storm water sewer at Radcliffe street and Pine Grove was too small. Water, during a heavy storm flows over the lawns of nearby property owners. Referred to Street & Highway Committee.

JOB INSURANCE

Biologists declare that in their opinion the evolution of the individual human has gone about as far as it will ever go; and that if the race is to reach higher levels it will be as the result of higher group evolution. In other words, society as a whole must learn to manage human affairs better than they are now arranged. It must improve and perfect social teamwork, and so order matters that there shall be enough of the good things of life to go around, and that each shall get his proper share. When we have stabilized employment and have assured a living wage to all who are willing to work for it, we shall have taken a long stride toward this Utopian goal.

Job insurance has been suggested as a means toward that end, but just who on the public payroll could be expected to take much interest in the jobs of others and the well-being of others between jobs?

Most people have a certain amount of job insurance even now, and no one to thank for it but themselves. It is in farms and home-steads, in savings banks, life insurance, building and loan stock, securities, professional equipment, businesses and other interests. Some are too young to have had time to surround themselves with such defenses against want; others, who are older, have tried and failed. Some lack job insurance as the result of ill health or incomplete training; others through shiftlessness and sheer incompetence; and a certain percentage of lame ducks we have always with us.

Self-reliance is the outstanding trait of the American people; and it is to the wise and careful exercise of that trait that the nation must look for the most liberal and most effective job insurance.

PALESTINE PROSPEROUS

It is refreshing to find one place in the world where there is no depression.

There is such a place, according to the American commercial attaché at Cairo, and that place is Palestine. There is more prosperity now in Palestine, the attaché says in a report to the department of commerce in Washington, than was the case in the pre-depression era. Factories working at full capacity are unable to meet the demand for domestic products, and a shortage of labor exists.

One of the things bringing about this condition is the steady influx of Jews from other countries. About a third of the entire population are employed in industry. As the population increases the consumer demand grows and a fresh boost is given industrial activity.

Maybe Palestine can find in the experiences of the rest of the world some valuable lessons which will enable it to avoid mistakes in its development. Usually though, a nation in the midst of a prosperity wave gives little attention to the future. This was one of the mistakes made by the rest of the world.

"STOLEN LOVE"

by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

COPYRIGHT BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

Lovely Joan Hastings lives a secluded life with her two stern, old aunts, Evvie and Babe Van Fleet, in Sausalito, California. She falls in love with Bill Martin, young mechanic. Learning this, Aunt Evvie sends Joan away to Pennsylvania to school. Enroute, Joan slips off the train and goes to Bill's home only to find that he left town without leaving an address. Joan settles in San Francisco unknown to her aunts. She boards with good-natured Mrs. Maisie Kinner and works in a department store. Bill, in the meantime, is befriended by Rollo Keyes, wealthy playboy. Rollo's father, believing Bill may have a good influence on his son, gives him a position where he learns surveying. He does not try to get in touch with Joan as he wants to be a success before he goes to her. Joan believes Bill no longer cares and is broken-hearted. Maisie tries in vain to make her forget. Maisie's daughter, Francine de Guiray gives Joan a position modeling wedding gowns in her exclusive Maison Francine. She is an instant success. After months of suffering, Joan vows she will not let her love for Bill ruin her life. She concentrates on a successful career and studies designing at night. Francine promises to help her reach the peak.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER XXI

Over in Sausalito the girls she used to know had forgotten her, all but Hilda Sedgwick. In Hilda's heart a little flame of envy burned. The stuck-up Van Fleets! They were worse than ever since Joan went East to boarding school.

"You'd think nobody ever went before! Oh, Mother, I too want to go to Bryn Mawr. I think Father's so stingy."

"Hilda!"

"Well, he is. But I don't care—I'm going to get him back plenty for the Tri Theta dance."

Such fun to shop. The black velvet in the Ville de Paris was so lovely for words, but of course Mother would have a fit.

There was just one gown in Francine's window. A cloud of heavenly pink, girlish enough to please a dozen mothers—chic enough to tickle all one's friends. Hilda knew exactly the way she'd look in it.

So did Hogan when Hilda wanted to try it on. Those stoop shoulders, gracious—

"I'll have it modeled for you," she gushed. "You can tell so much better, seeing it on the figure."

Of course, Anna had to take that very minute to go out to lunch. "You'll have to model the pink chiffon for me!" Hogan said belligerently to Joan, "lending a hand" in the workroom.

Francine had praised her. She felt giddy with elation. "Why I don't mind, Hogan!"

"You've got the gift, Joan. You're getting there—Francine had said."

Joan was still faintly smiling when she came down the three gray velvet steps into the shop, gold hair glinting, pink skirts billowing.

"You've got the gift—you're getting there!" Francine's rare praise was still ringing in her ears. Francine thought her designs were good. Soon she'd be sitting at the table in the workshop all day long, busy with pencil and water colors, and Francine coming to her: "Do you think I'm right about the brocade lining I was planning, Joan, or do you think a powder blue instead—"

No more modeling, soon. No more of this walking around like a doll, showing dresses with a silly smile.

You didn't know I worked here, did you?" While she struggled to say them, Hilda watched fascinated, staring incredulously at first, as if she had seen a ghost. Then, with a sharp jerk at her sister's arm and a mumbled, "I don't like it after all," to Hogan, she was gone. Gone with Joan's high hopes in her stubby hands.

All afternoon Joan tried to think. Hilda would go straight home and tell her mother, and Mrs. Sedgwick would call on Aunt Evvie right away. Tuesday, Aunt Evvie hated callers except on the second Thursday. Heeley would bring in the tea, looking daggers, and Mrs. Sedgwick would put two lumps of sugar in the cup and say, "Miss Van Fleet, I really think you should know—your niece is in San Francisco—a model—at the Maison Francine."

And then—But she never got any further in her thoughts. They stuck

I feel truly slighted when he does leave me for a night." The headache powder had dulled the ache, and the hot tea had warmed Joan's heart. She felt better and wanted to prolong the pleasant dullness. When she went home she would have to think. Here she could just listen, while Mrs. Barstow talked.

She showed Joan pictures. Pictures of a solemn-eyed baby in a long, long christening dress. "My son, Curtis, at seven weeks." A rather fat little boy with curls and kilts. That was Curtis when he was four. And there was Curtis in short pants, and Curtis in long pants, and finally a Curtis in cap and gown, "when he was graduated from college."

Joan murmured polite comments with her lips. Her mind had begun to race again. . . . Hilda . . . Aunt Evvie . . . Francine . . . They had finished dinner already! She was drinking coffee out of a right there, her head ached so. There wouldn't be any future now. Aunt Evvie would do something . . . something to spoil it . . . shame her something.

Throb, throb, throb. She wanted to snatch one of the filmy gowns she was hanging on the rack and tie it, ever so tight about her head, to stop the pain. Throb, throb. She began hanging the dresses in time to the throbbing pain. It gave her a mournful satisfaction. She was almost glad it hurt so much.

"Madame Francine tells me such interesting things of you! She says you are studying design."

It was Mrs. Curtis Barstow, "the nicest customer" Joan always called her. She tried to smile through the pain, because it was so nice of Mrs. Barstow to still think she was going to be a designer. But, of course, she didn't know that Aunt Evvie would put a stop to it—that it was all over.

"I've got such a headache!" she heard herself saying.

"Oh, I'm so sorry. Come have some hot tea with me. I was just going in search of some. Madame will let you come. I'm sure. Madame de Guiray, you'll let me have Miss Hastings for tea?"

Mrs. Barstow, all pink fur and violet scented motherliness, fairly pushed Joan into her waiting limousine.

"I believe we'll go home," she said. "It's so much more restful. And I can give you something for your poor head."

It was good to feel cool hands on her hot forehead. Mrs. Barstow was so nice. Joan had always admired her tremendously, her perfectly dressed white hair, her delicate, Dresden-china charm. They had often talked together for hours in the shop, about books and wild flowers and styles. She wasn't only a customer, she was a friend.

Her house was nice too. Big and airy and old-fashioned, like the old place across the bay. There was even a garden, with a hedge. And a silver tea service with elaborate crests and embossing, like the one she used to help Heeley clean at home!

"Stay to dinner, too," Mrs. Barstow begged. "My son is away, and I so hate to be alone. I'm such a selfish old woman. He spoils me so, small gilt and blue cup that Mrs. Barstow, still rambling on in her sweet, colorless voice, said her son had brought from France last summer, when the dining room door opened and Curtis himself—Joan knew it was he even before his mother presented him, came in.

"I didn't expect you tonight!" Mrs. Barstow half rose from her chair, and glanced at Joan.

He glanced at Joan too, and the color rose ever so slightly in his olive cheek. His light brown eyes seemed to darken, he pushed his smooth hair back with a nervous, boyish gesture.

He didn't look like Bill, not a bit, but something in the way he looked at her made Joan think of Bill. Made her think of that first day when she stood in the window, and he looked up at her from the rose garden in the sun . . . her eyes blurred. She looked down at her plate.

"Miss Hastings has been keeping me company. I'm such a selfish old woman to let her, for the poor child has a headache." Mrs. Barstow was murmuring tactful things, all about Joan's headache, and how the time crept round so fast. "I'm going to send you right home, my dear, so that you'll have a good night's rest, and will feel so much better in the morning. Curtis, if you'll call the car, and tell Roberts—"

"She doesn't want me to know her son—she'd never have asked me here if she knew he was coming home," Joan thought. "She needn't worry—I wouldn't look at him—"

"All ready to start, Miss Hastings?"

Curtis Barstow was going to drive her himself!

"But you have a cold, dear—you had a sore throat yesterday!" His mother's hands fluttered over his, brushed imaginary dust from his sleeve, came to rest lovingly on his shoulder.

He touched her cheek affectionately. "I'm all right, Mother. Don't bother." The smile he gave her was filial, but his tone was flat, final.

Mrs. Barstow's fluttering white hands dropped to her sides. There came a little pinched look about her nose, but she did not argue further.

MARY LOU GOES SHOPPING

SHE is only eight, but, even at this tender age Mary Lou is a daily customer at the neighborhood stores. Perhaps it is a package of crackers, and a pound of coffee at the grocer's. Perhaps it is some tooth-paste or toilet soap at the drug store.

Of course Mary Lou doesn't decide on what she is going to buy. Her mother writes a list — this brand of crackers, this brand of coffee, this make of tooth-paste, this kind of soap. She knows the prices, and gives Mary Lou just enough money, with an extra penny or two, perhaps, to spend for herself.

Buying is just as simple and easy as that because of just one thing — Advertising.

Advertising has given all of us a lot to be thankful for.

Because of advertising, people in Texas know about and buy Michigan motor cars. People in New Hampshire buy oranges raised in Florida and California. Because of advertising, merchants and manufacturers are forced to improve their products. It has standardized quality. It has increased consumption and thereby lowered costs. It promotes competition and thereby keeps dealers and merchants wide awake to secure for you the most for your money.

But best of all it writes "Finis" on the business career of any merchant or manufacturer who attempts to fool the public or give them less than value received.

It pays to read all advertisements in this paper

Dog Buried Here Shares Honors, Leonine Marker

terrier, 15 years old and weighing ten pounds. Quite different from a lion!

Very truly,
PHIL. K. CONRAD.

By Laura Lee

Well! Does that lion's picture look like a lion or like a dog?

And if a lion isn't buried there—if it's a dog—what is a dog doing under the statue of a lion?

The mystery kept us awake two nights. Then we called on Mr. Conrad, on the Delaware river road, Unterstown, Bucks county.

Mr. Conrad was in a high state of amusement. He's been getting "kidding" letters from old friends of "Teddy Boy's" in Philadelphia and New York—the alleged picture of "Teddy Boy" and the story about the Francisville Cemetery having been reprinted in the New York newspapers.

It's like this, Mr. Conrad explains.

The monument is the statue of a lion. (We were right there, anyway!) But the animal buried there is the one in the other picture, the terrier with the cocked ear. He measured eight inches high and about 12 long. And even he in his bravest moments never imagined he looked like a lion.

The way it happened was that 26 years ago, Mr. Conrad, architect and builder, hurried off to Buffalo, where he was building a church.

There he accidentally damaged a fine piece of Indiana limestone that was meant for the base of a large column.

As a sort of memento, John Craig, a Scotch sculptor, who was doing the figures on the church, carved from the limestone a lion, and exact copy of one of the four lions which form part of the McKinley monument in Niagara Square, in Buffalo.

Mr. Craig presented the lion to Mr. Conrad, which gift Mr. Conrad prized greatly but never knew quite what to do with. Sometimes he kept it out in the yard, sometimes in the house on a stand.

For some reason "Teddy Boy" always liked to lie under the stone lion. Maybe it gave him a feeling of strength. He certainly had the spunk of a lion, Mr. Conrad reports. He would talk right up to any big dog.

The reason for the name, Conrad's "Teddy Boy," is that when he was registered at the American Kennel Club there were so many Teddy Boys he had to have another identifying name.

"Teddy Boy" was a great favorite with Mr. Conrad's father, the late David Conrad, who lived in North Philadelphia. . . . He died some 15 years ago with the little dog in his arms.

When "Teddy Boy" died a short time later it seemed fitting that the prized lion should top his grave. The name "Jack," carved beneath was for another dog, buried in Bristol, however.

Today a life-size portrait of "Teddy Boy" hangs in the Conrad's bedroom.

About the lion buried in the Francisville Cemetery—Mr. Conrad feels sure it is only a tradition, started by a rumor because of his lion statue and because "Teddy Boy's" plot is larger than most of the others. He doesn't think there ever was a lion buried there.

But George Armstrong, agent in charge of the cemetery and home for animals, insists there is a pet lion buried there—some place. He said Dr. J. William Linberg, a veterinarian, who died four years ago, told him he had buried the lion for a client. Dr. Linberg's widow said she does not remember having heard Dr. Linberg speak of it.

Lewis W. Ahn, superintendent, who deeds the cemetery lots, said all the records up to 1927 were accidentally destroyed—that he doesn't know about a lion, that the man in charge before

Mr. Armstrong is now dead, but that if Mr. Armstrong says there is a lion buried there, there is a lion.

Will the owner of the lion please step forward?

Although held to four hits, the St. Ann's A. A. bunched these bingles to score a close 4-3 victory over the Edgely A. C. last night on St. Ann's field. The victory enabled the Purple and Gold to maintain its lead on first place in the league.

Two runs in the fourth, with Edgely leading 3-2 at the time, spelled victory for the Saints. Borneice opened by being safe on Gould's error. Whyno flied out to first. Juno doubled to left center, scoring Borneice with the tying run. Juno counted from second on DeBlassio's bunt down the third base line. Blassio beat the ball out for a single. Fields and Peio flied out.

"Pete" Minkema pitched for the losers and hurled well enough to win an ordinary game, but heads up baseball on the St. Ann's team proved to be his downfall. He fanned seven batters and passed two.

"Charlie" Whyno, on the hill for the winners, was found for seven hits but five of these came in the first two innings when Edgely counted all their tallies.

"Sid" Pureell and John Hibbs, catchers for the Edgely team, were both injured during the fray.

The Hibernians kept in the running for the first half championship by stopping the Independents, 7-4, on Sullivan's field last night.

The winners counted all their tallies in the first three innings. The "Indies" refused to go down fighting and pushed across runs in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth innings. But every time something started a flaw in the base-running would end the rally.

Harold Snyder, twirler for the winners, was hit hard during the last three innings of mound work. He was found for seven hits, two of which were a double and triple by Jake Tranotti.

Antonelli started for the Independents and was relieved by Lasprella in the fourth. Lasprella blanked the Hibs during his turn on the hill.
